10:00 – 15:50 SECTION I

FIGHTING CORRUPTION & SAFEGUARDING INTEGRITY IN SEE

Moderated by Prof. Josip Kregar

10:00 – 10:40 The perception of corruption in SEE

It presents TI's Corruption Perceptions Index (CPI) and discusses the importance to use the measures of the perceived levels of public-sector corruption in a given country to understand the harmful effect of corruption on people's welfare.

Mr. Miklos Marschall

Regional Director for Europe and Central Asia – Transparency International, Berlin

10:40 – 11:10 GROUP PHOTO AND COFFEE BREAK

11:10 – 11:50 How to detect and investigate corruption

It will describe OLAF's powers and tasks for accomplishment of its mandate lie in three main areas, which make up OLAF's "platform of services": investigations and coordination/assistance, intelligence, and development of anti-fraud policy. These three functions are complementary, in that the findings from OLAF's investigations represent an important source of information for the work of the intelligence units, which in turn leads to further information to be used to detect fraud.

Mr. Wolfgang Hetzer

*Anti-corruption adviser
European Anti-Fraud Office, Bruxelles*

11:50 – 12:30 Prevention – A key factor in fighting corruption

The presentation will discuss about the implementation of the integrity plans as a strategic tool for prevention of corruption in public institutions and is one of the fundamentals of the Slovenian national strategy in the fight against corruption.

12:30 – 13:10 UN convention against corruption. A powerful tool to be used

The presentation will be on "Basic Principles of the UN Convention Against Corruption." It will cover (a) corruption prevention, (b) criminalization and law enforcement, (c) international cooperation, and (d) asset recovery.

Mr. Erik Larson

*Crime Prevention Expert, UNODC –
United Nations Office for Drugs and Crime, Vienna*

13:10 – 14:30 LUNCH

14:30 – 15:10 Increasing transparency and accountability in combating corruption

The presentation will discuss about accountability within a democratic nation analyzing how it should work in order that the people are able to hold their leaders accountable. The roles that parliament, independent media, civil society and political parties play in a democratic society to ensure that government serves society and that corruption is minimized.

Mr. John Williams

Chief Executive Officer, GOPAC-Global Organization of Parliamentarians Against Corruption, Ottawa

15:10 – 15:50 The role of parliaments in curbing corruption

In all countries in South-East Europe, parliament has the constitutional mandate to both oversee government and to hold government accountable. Audit institutions, ombuds and anti-corruption agencies often report to parliament as a means of ensuring both their independence from government and reinforcing parliament's position. At the same time, parliaments can also play a key role in promoting accountability through building constituencies with civil society, public hearings, and parliamentary commissions.

REDUCING CORRUPTION IN SECURITY SECTOR AND DEFENSE

Moderated by Mr. Zorislav Antun Petrović,
President, TI Croatia

09:00 – 09:40 Building integrity and reducing risk of corruption in Defence establishments: what has been achieved by NATO and its partners?

It will brief participants on what has been achieved to date, what are the likely next steps and how nations and others can support the effort to build integrity and reduce the risk of corruption in defence establishments.

Ms. Susan Pond

*Senior Officer,
Political and Security Policy Division, NATO, Bruxelles*

09:40 – 10:20 European defense procurement: countering bribery through procurement regulation?

Public procurement regulation in the context of the European Union is not specifically designed as an instrument to fight corruption. However, it imposes numerous obligations on contracting entities, which ensure the transparency of the procurement process thereby making corruption more difficult in practice. The procurement activities of the ministries of defence of the Member States of the European Union are subject to a number of security and secrecy exemptions from the public procurement rules. This presentation will provide an accessible analysis of these exemptions and how they are operated in practice.

10:50 – 11:30 Reducing corruption risk in Defence -
Practical reforms

Corruption is costly and a waste of scarce resources. It dramatically impacts the operational effectiveness of military forces and reduces public trust and acceptance of the military. Corruption also reduces the credibility of national and international forces deployed on peacekeeping missions. Practical reforms to reducing corruption risk include both highlighting the “good” as well as reducing the “bad” perceptions. Increased transparency of structures and processes and greater oversight of key procurements and “offsets” all have a part to play in this process. Similarly, effective training programmes, including mentoring and workshops, all contribute to reducing corruption risk in defence.

Mr. Hugh Edleston (retired Rear Admiral)

Military Consultant, TI (UK)'s Defense Anti-Corruption team, UK

11:30 – 12:10 Border controls and corruption

“The presentation will outline the reason for border controls, the vulnerability and consequences of corruption in the Border Agencies and will also outline anticorruption measures to reduce the opportunity for corruption to thrive.”

Mr. Tom McGoona

Retired Customs Law Enforcement Officer, UK

12:10 – 12:50 KEYNOTE ADDRESS

THE FUTURE OF CORRUPTION BENCHMARKING IN THE EU.

Identifying anti-corruption progress remains largely arbitrary. Diagnosing the state of corruption and obtaining reliable information about its dynamics are crucial to the implementation of successful prevention and control policies, including within the EU itself. The evolution of the EU's policies in the area of anti-corruption suggests that the next logical step in this process is the development of EU's own methodology for benchmarking corruption, as has been done in other areas.
